EAGLES-FALCONS 5 THINGS TO WATCH FOR

EVAN MACY, SPORTS EDITOR

Here we go. The Eagles' best chance to win a Super Bowl in over a decade will finally manifest in the most important football game in Philadelphia in ages. Even without Carson Wentz, the path to the big game still goes through Philly, and on Saturday at 4:35, Philly will look to prove it is more than a one-trick pony. What will it take to slow down a red-hot Atlanta team that has won four of its last five games? Here are five things:

For more on the game, turn to pages 16-24.

THE NICK FOLES FACTOR

Nick Foles knows how to be a quarterback in the NFL. Everyone knows about his seven-touchdown game in 2013 and his 27 touchdowns to just two interceptions that year. Eagles fans just hope he remembers Saturday.

He's been a mixed bag since taking over for Wentz against the Rams back in December, but has had two solid weeks of practice to get on the same page with Alshon Jeffery, Zach Ertz and company. Will he flex his arm and try and move the ball downfield?

"You're always wanting to make the big play," Foles said. "As a quarterback it's one of your favorite throws, to let one rip and have a 70-yard touchdown. It's the sweetest thing in the world but you have to play the game, let it come to you. You can't force it. We will see how the game plays out every game is different."

KEEP THE SCORE LOW

2 The Falcons have not won this season while scoring less than 20 points. If the Eagles defense, which allows 18.4 points per game — fourth-best in the NFL — is able to keep the inconsistent Falcons offense somewhat in check, the numbers suggest the Eagles will have a very good chance.

Even with Julio Jones the Falcons have struggled in the red zone finding the end zone in just 50 percent of their red-zone tries (the Eagles lead the NFL at 65 percent). Philadelphia allows 55 percent of opponent red zone tries to result in a touchdown, a stat in the bottom third of NFL defenses. This stat could be key Saturday.

USE HOME FIELD

3 There is a reason why the Eagles are 7-1 at home this season (with the final loss coming in a meaningless Week 17 bout against the Cowboys). The Eagles love playing at home, and Eagles fans love being the 12th man and making things miserable for opponents. Falcons quarterback Ryan has won just once in four tries at Lincoln Financial Field and his indoor, dome-dwelling team has pretty bad numbers playing in the cold January weather. These factors could be the edge the Eagles need Saturday.

"I think as far as the crowd goes, our fans are already crazy," Eagles cornerback Jalen Mills said. "The tickets sold out in a minute or something crazy like that. That shows you how much the fans are into it."

RUN THE BALL BETTER THAN FALCONS DO

4 It's impossible to overstate how important running the ball successfully will be in this playoff game. Giving Foles short third-down distances will make things monumentally less difficult. Controlling the time of possession and keeping Atlanta's weapons off the field will also be important. And setting up the play action and run-pass-option play will also boost Philly's offense.

Jay Ajayi will likely be a huge factor in the game along with LeGarrette Blount. If they can be a two-headed monster that outgains Atlanta's duo of Devonta Freeman and Tevin Coleman a victory should follow.

"We have different run schemes each and every week," head coach Doug Pederson said, acknowledging the importance of run effectiveness, one for a specific runner and two, based on what the defense is presenting."

MAKE MATT RYAN UNCOMFORTABLE

5 The Eagles have spent more of their salary cap — over 20 percent — on their offensive line than every playoff team this year except for the Jaguars (26 percent). Philly did this for a reason. Fletcher Cox and Brandon Graham are among the best pass rushers in football, while rotational ends Chris Long and rookie Derek Barnett have made a bevy of huge, game-changing plays this season. Tim Jernigan and Vinny Curry are also in the upper wrung of NFL defensive lineman and the group has the ability to thwart any offensive line. If they can get to Ryan, the crowd will be raucous and life the Eagles defense all afternoon long.

"Our fans will be a huge influence on the game," Pederson said. "You've seen it time and time again.... We're excited, No. 1, to be playing at home in front of those folks."

Philly to honor fallen firefighter at public viewings in cathedral

Public viewings will be held for Lt. Matthew LeTourneau before his funeral service.

SAM NEWHOUSE
@scnewhouse
sam.newhouse@metro.us

Philadelphians are coming together to honor a local firefighter who lost his life while fighting a blaze that also killed one civilian.

Lt. Matthew LeTourneau, 42, of Engine 45/Platoon A, will be laid to rest Friday. Before the funeral, a final public viewing was expected to be held at the Cathedral Basilica of Sts. Peter and Paul so citizens could pay their respects to the firefighter who died inside a Philly row house,

The two-alarm fire that LeTourneau died fighting lit up a North Philly row house on the 2200 block of North Colorado Street around 8:51 a.m. on Saturday, Jan. 6.

It was reportedly LeTourneau's last shift with Engine 45 before a scheduled shift change, according to WHYY.

But single-digit temps that morning didn't make fighting the fire any easier, even though some 100 firefighters responded to the scene.

LeTourneau died after being pinned under debris that fell due to an interior collapse, the Fire Department said. It reportedly took a half-hour to unpin him. He was pronounced dead around 11 a.m. at Temple University Hospital.

One other male, who has not been publicly identified but was reportedly an occupant of the house, also died in the blaze.

Mayor Jim Kenney ordered all city of Philadelphia flags hung at half-staff for the 30 days following LeTourneau's death.

"I am grateful for his outstanding service to our city during his 11-year career," Kenney said in a statement. "Lt. LeTourneau sacrificed his life trying to save others. Our firefighters demonstrate tremendous acts of heroism every single day."

A resident of Springfield in Delco and 11-year veteran of the fire department, LeTourneau graduated Cardinal O'Hara High School in 1993 and got an associate's degree in fire science at Delaware County Community College.

"He had previously served at Engine 43 and Engine 57, and was promoted to lieutenant in 2015," the Fire Department said in an announcement of his death. "He received a unit citation in 2010 and a letter of commendation for his service during the World Meeting of Families in 2015.... He is survived by his mother, other relatives and friends."

The public viewings are being held at the Cathedral Basilica of Sts. Peter & Paul cathedral at 18th Street and Benjamin Franklin Parkway, in Center City Philadelphia; they began Thursday afternoon and will continue on Friday morning.

The viewing on Friday, Jan. 12, will be held at the Cathedral Basilica from 9 a.m. until the funeral services begin at 11 a.m.

LeTourneau will be laid to rest at Saints Peter and Paul Cemetery in Springfield, Pennsylvania, after the funeral.

New Jersey doc allegedly hired Pagan bike gang member to kill his wife

@scnewhouse
sam.newhouse@metro.us

James Kauffman is charged with murdering his wife to protect his alleged opioid operation.

A former South Jersey doctor and a Pagan motorcycle gang member had a hearing Thursday over how they allegedly plotted the murder of the doctor's wife.

Dr. James Kauffman, 68, was arrested for the 2012 murder of his wife, April Kauffman, 47, a local businesswoman and radio host who had received awards for her community service.

Prosecutors now say April's death was plotted by her husband, an endocrinologist, in part to conceal his profitable business selling illegal painkillers on the side allegedly through the Pagans motorcycle gang.

Kauffman was arrested at his Egg Harbor Township medical office in June 2017 after police executed a warrant looking for illegal guns. He held a 9mm Ruger, said "I'm not going to jail for this" and pointed the gun at himself before surrendering to police. (A Kelch .380-caliber was also reportedly found at his practice.)

He and Augello were charged on Jan. 9 with plotting his wife's murder, along with five others charged by the Atlantic City Prosecutor's Office with racketeering and related charges.

Prosecutors from the New Jersey Attorney General's office say that Kauffman sold Percocet, OxyContin and Oxydone out of his practice. Alleged Pagan Ferdinand Augello sent him customers, and got some $1,000 per prescription or pre-arranged supply of pills. The operation was run entirely by Pagans and their associates, prosecutors say. All told, seven people were charged.

Prosecutors say that as April was divorcing Kauffman, his objections to her requests led her to threaten to expose his illicit activities and to "attempt to spend as much money as she could until a divorce was granted," prosecutors say.

Whether or not she truly intended to go to authorities, Kauffman conveyed to the Pagans that she presented a real threat, prosecutors claim.

"James Kauffman stated he would sooner kill April than grant the divorce and lose 'half his empire,'" they said in a press release.

Kauffman and Augello allegedly spent a year looking for someone willing to kill April, and eventually found alleged hitman Francis Mulholland, who on May 10, 2012, entered the Kauffman's home in Linwood and shot April twice in the second-floor bedroom, killing her. He later said he received $20,000 for his role, prosecutors said.

The case was cold for five years before prosecutors linked it back to her husband after executing the search warrant at his office.

Augello is also charged with conspiracy to murder Dr. Kauffman. Further details about that plot were not immediately available.

Dr. James Kauffman has been jailed since June. NJ AG'S OFFICE

Trump had a secret plan to scrap Obamacare no matter what, new document reveals

Although the repeal vote in Congress was chaotic, there was a detailed blueprint Trump could enact unilaterally.

MICHAEL MARTIN
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

Last spring, while attempts to formally repeal Obamacare were flailing in Congress, the Trump administration showed Republicans their secret plan to take apart the health law using President Donald Trump's authority.

"While the effort to scrap Obamacare often looked chaotic, top officials had actually developed an elaborate plan to undermine the law — regardless of whether Congress repealed it," reported Politico on Wednesday, revealing the contents of a previously secret March 23 memo.

The detailed blueprint, shared with members of the ultraconservative Freedom Caucus, listed 10 executive actions Trump planned to take to "improve the individual and small group markets most harmed by Obamacare," a euphemism for discouraging signups and dismantling certain aspects of the health law.

They included: stricter verification of people signing up for insurance outside of the open enrollment period; cutting the sign-up period in half; and allowing states to waive insurers' obligation to provide the essential benefits required by Obamacare.

The memo was created to woo House conservatives, who were about to vote on the first plan to repeal Obamacare but were concerned that GOP plans weren't conservative enough. Obamacare supporters railed against such proposals, arguing they would make insurance harder to get.

Sen. Bob Casey (D-PA) obtained the document and shared it with the press. "The primary problem here is government officials, government agencies, were taking steps that would lead to fewer people having coverage and erecting barriers to people having coverage," he said. "In addition to that, you have kind of a closed-door, back-room slimy deal here that should trouble anyone."

On Thursday, the Department of Health and Human Services said it was committed to providing Americans "relief and access to affordable health care" but didn't comment on their plans to implement any remaining policies. "Under the Trump administration, HHS has been and remains committed to any and all actions, within the confines of the law, to provide relief and access to affordable healthcare for all Americans," said HHS press secretary Caitlin Oakley.

IMMIGRATION

Trump refers to 'sh-thole' countries in Oval Office meeting

President Donald Trump slammed "sh-thole countries" during an Oval Office debate on immigration on Thursday afternoon, the Washington Post reported.

The remarks came during an impromptu meeting with members of Congress on a bipartisan immigration deal. An attendee proposed restoring protections to citizens of Haiti, El Salvador and African nations, after which the president "grew frustrated" and responded, "Why are we having all these people from sh-thole countries come here?" He then suggested that more immigrants be allowed from Norway, whose prime minister he met with yesterday, the Post said.

Lawmakers in the room were "taken aback," the Post said. They included Sens. Lindsey Graham (R-SC) and Dick Durbin (D-IL), who were surprised that immigration hardliners Rep. Bob Goodlatte (R-VA) and Sen. Tom Cotton (R-AR) were included. The bipartisan deal they proposed included cutting the visa lottery program by 50 percent, prioritizing countries currently in the system, restoring protections for countries that had been removed and allocating $1.5 billion for a border wall.

In a statement, the White House didn't deny the remarks. "Certain Washington politicians choose to fight for foreign countries, but President Trump will always fight for the American people," White House deputy press secretary Raj Shah said. "He will always reject temporary, weak and dangerous stopgap measures that threaten the lives of hardworking Americans and undercut immigrants who seek a better life in the United States through a legal pathway." Scrotox: Millennial men are Botoxing their balls. Here's why

CASSIE HEPLER
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

These guys are taking manscaping to a whole new level.

Botox is popular among people looking to improve the appearance of their faces, but there is an emerging trend in the world of plastic surgery that gives Botox a new purpose. It's called Scrotox, and as the name suggests, it's for your balls, guys.

According to experts, more millennial men are jumping on the ball-Botox bandwagon and taking manscaping to a whole new level. Scrotox is a nonsurgical cosmetic treatment of the scrotum with neurotoxin or Botox injections. Botox is injected directly into the testicles to decrease sweating, reduce wrinkles and make the scrotum appear larger due to the relaxation of the muscles. The result, doctors say, is an improved appearance.

Gotham Plastic Surgery surgeon Douglas S. Steinbrech points to more benefits, like allowing testicles to hang down further, relieving testicular pain and enhancing sexual activity.

"This idea came to fruition because I have a male practice and I have patients coming in and asking for every sort of improvement for their bodies and faces, and this was a logical extension of my practice. I have patients that came in and wanted more of a relaxed area down there and didn't like the look of that area with so much 'shrinkage' as they would say on the 'Seinfeld' show," said Steinbrech, who practices in New York

The Scrotox procedure takes approximately four minutes. iStock

City as well as Beverly Hills. "This procedure is increasing in popularity with my patients in New York and in Los Angeles."

Is Scrotox safe?

Though Scrotox is not FDA-approved, Steinbrech believes Botox is safe to inject in the testicular area. The procedure takes about four minutes and the Botox takes two to seven days for the muscle to relax. There is not any significant swelling, he said, and the patient can return to work immediately after the procedure and go to the gym the same day. The age group for this procedure is somewhere between the early 20s through the 50s, with most patients in their 20s and 30s.

Dr. Kerem Bortecen of NYC Surgical Associates points to the psychological benefits of Scrotox, which he says can potentially enhance a man's sexual performance by boosting self-confidence. But Dr. Bortecen's views on the safety of the procedure are mixed.

"Some experts believe Scrotox could have a potentially negative effect on sperm count and effectiveness," he told Metro. "Testicles are outside of the body for a reason; sperm functions better at a lower temperature than the body temperature."

The scrotum helps regulate body temperature, contracting and relaxing the testicles close to and away from the body, Bortecen said. Injecting Botox into this area could have an effect on this function and therefore potentially affect sperm count. There is also the possibility that Botox could spread inside the body to a man's testicles.

"I believe there is still more testing and research to be done both on short-term and long-term effects before recommending this to patients," Bortecen said. "It's a strictly cosmetic treatment with no health benefits; however, I do think it could be beneficial to men who are self-conscious about their scrotum who are looking for a solution."

A male patient who asked to remain anonymous said he heard about Scrotox from a male physician friend who gets it himself as "his girlfriend didn't care or think it was weird or anything."

At around $500 a pop, this patient's doctor predicted it will last about 3 months and he's built about $2,000 a year into his budget for the procedure.

"It will make my balls appear bigger as well as smoother, which will make sex better. I also understand it will assist with limiting sweat as well. It will make my scrotum more pleasant looking and not wrinkly. It will make sex better as my scrotum will be smooth like a baby's butt," he said.

James Franco accused of sexual misconduct against five women

RACHAEL VAUGHAN CLEMMONS
@rachaelclemz
rachael.clemmons@metro.us

The "Disaster Artist" actor is facing claims that he used his power to sexually exploit and abuse the women.

Golden Globe winner James Franco is the latest leading man to be accused of sexually inappropriate behavior toward women.

The 39-year-old "Disaster Artist" star — who was blasted on Twitter for wearing a "Time's Up" pin to the Golden Globes on Sunday — apparently tried to get ahead of accusations that he sexually exploited and abused women by addressing the matter on "Late Night With Seth Meyers" on Wednesday.

"One of the things I've learned is that this is a conversation that obviously needs to be had," he said. "There are people, women and others, who have not been a part of this conversation. And I truly believe they need to be part of this conversation. So that's why I was wearing the pin and I support that."

The allegations, published Thursday in the Los Angeles Times, came from five different women. Here are their stories.

Sarah Tither-Kaplan

Tither-Kaplan, a 26-year-old student actress, told the Times that during filming a nude orgy scene with Franco and several other women three years ago he removed protective plastic guards covering other actresses' vagi-nas and simulated oral sex on them.

"I feel there was an abuse of power," she tells the paper. "And there was a culture of exploiting non-celebrity women, and a culture of women being replaceable." She also took to Twitter the night of the Golden Globes to express her exasperation with Franco proudly wearing his "Time's Up" pin.

Violet Paley

Paley, 23, met Franco in 2016 and began a romantic relationship with him — but she says the power dynamic was always off.

Recalling an incident in which the two of them were in the car, she says, "I was talking to him, all of a sudden his penis was out. I got really nervous, and I said, 'Can we do this later?' He was kind of nudging my head down, and I just didn't want him to hate me, so I did it."

Hilary Dusome and Natalie Chmiel

Both Dusome and Chmiel recounted Franco getting angry on a set when none of the actresses acquiesced to his request that they take their shirts off. Chmiel says she was told the footage was for a jeans commercial; Dusome thought it was for one of his "art films."

Katie Ryan

Ryan, the fifth accuser, met Franco at Playhouse West and took several classes with him. She says he "would always make everybody think there were possible roles on the table if we were to perform sexual acts or take off our shirts." She also notes that for years, she received mass email requests from Franco to audition for roles playing a "prostitute or a hooker."

This isn't the first time Franco has been accused. Earlier this week, the actor appeared on Stephen Colbert's "The Late Show" to deny previous accusations of sexual misconduct. Franco told Colbert that those claims were "not accurate" but said "if I've done something wrong, I will fix it."

Franco is nominated for a Screen Actors Guild award for his "Disaster Artist" role at a Jan. 21 ceremony in Los Angeles.

Trump expects medical exam to go well Friday

Trump's physical exam is not expected to include a mental acuity test.

President Donald Trump said on Thursday he expects a medical examination he is to undergo on Friday will go well and that he would be surprised if it did not.

Answering questions from reporters after an event on prison reform at the White House, Trump said with a smile, "It better go well, otherwise the stock market will not be happy."

"I think it's going to go very well. I'll be very surprised if it doesn't," he said.

The medical checkup at Walter Reed Medical Center in nearby Bethesda, Maryland, will be the first for Trump since he took office nearly a year ago.

exam was announced early last month after he slurred part of a speech in which he declared the United States recognized Jerusalem as the capital of Israel.

Michael Wolff, author of "Fire and Fury: Inside the Trump White House," has charged in promoting the book that Trump lacked the mental fitness to serve as president, drawing fire from Trump, his aides and supporters.

Trump's physical exam is not expected to include a mental acuity test.

White House spokeswoman Sarah Sanders told reporters the exam will be conducted by presidential physician Ronny Jackson.

A statement about the results will be released on Friday. At the White House on Tuesday, Jackson will give details on Trump's health and take questions. REUTERS

OP-ED: 'NO-KILL' SHELTERS ARE A MYTH

Dog trainer Pat Miller responds to the Metro article "Philadelphia animal welfare groups unite into a new 'no-kill' coalition."

Sorry to burst anyone's bubble, but so-called "no-kill" is a myth. I have worked professionally with animals for more than 40 years, 20 of those in an open-admission shelter. No-kill is an admirable goal, and 90 percent sounds nice, but it's a lot of smoke and mirrors. Just label an animal "unadoptable" and it doesn't count in your statistics. The so-called no-kill movement has spawned an industry that hands animals off to any and all comers, giving rise to an exponential increase in hoarder cases, where animals, many who came from "no-kill" shelters, suffer and die in horrendous conditions.

Pets without homes face uncertain futures. GETTY IMAGES

The numbers at the end of the article are meaningless, unless you know what happened to the 62 percent of dogs and cats that "survived." Now living in hoarder homes? Dumped to live and suffer short lives on the streets as "community ferals"? Sentenced to suffer for years in cages at so-called "no-kill" shelters? Adopted indiscriminately with lowered adoption standards to homes where they may — or may not — receive good care?

Twelve thousand fewer dogs and cats received — where did they go? Just because they didn't come to the shelter doesn't mean they are living happily somewhere over the rainbow. It often just means shelters have successfully discouraged people from bringing animals there — but they may end up someplace worse.

We need to shut down puppy mills and irresponsible breeders if we ever want to make a real difference in the challenge of too many animals and not enough homes. PAT MILLER

How to treat dry skin: A guide for surviving the winter

MEAGAN MORRIS
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

Prevent a chapped hide with these tips.

The whipping winter winds can leave you with more than cold fingers and toes.

It can also dry your skin, causing it to crack, itch and just plain hurt. The good news is that you don't have to resign yourself to a season full of dryness. Instead, it just requires you to switch up your skin-care routine — at least until spring starts. Here's how to treat dry skin and, ultimately, fix it so you're not just easing the pain.

Why does skin get dry in the winter?

Dry winter skin comes from a perfect storm of factors, including the cold air and, unfortunately, hot showers.

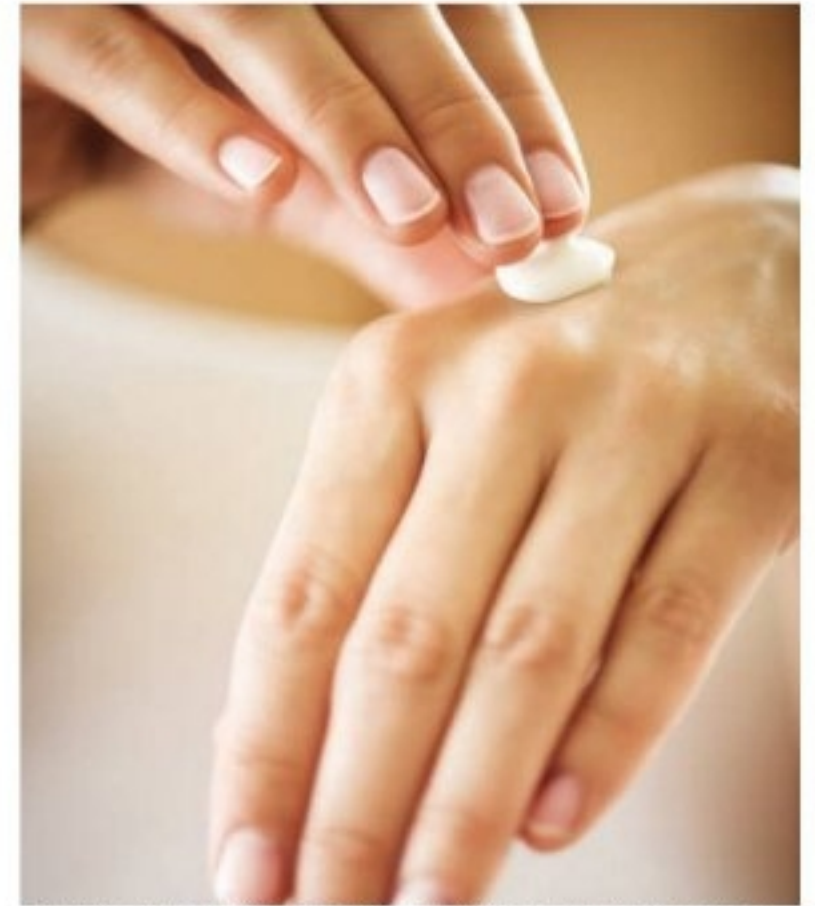

Winter skin is at least 25 percent drier, according to one dermatologist. The low humidity also plays a big role because it causes the water in your skin to evaporate more rapidly, leaving with that familiar tight feeling.

We also spend a lot more time inside. Indoor heating might keep us warm, but the heat can dry out our skin and mucous membranes, leading to dried, cracked and even bleeding skin.

Frequent handwashing and your love of anti-bacterial hand sanitizers also wreak havoc on your skin because soap and the alcohol in the sanitizers zap the natural oils from your hands. And here's the ironic part: You wash and sanitize your hands to keep illness away, but dry and cracked skin can create microscopic cuts that can actually cause infections or bring in bacteria that cause illness.

How to treat dry skin in the winter

We've painted a bleak picture about winter

Dry winter skin comes from a perfect storm of factors, including the cold air and hot showers. ISTOCK skin, but there are ways to prevent it. Here's how to treat dry skin and even reverse it.

1. Fix your diet

First thing's first: Make sure you're eating well and drinking a lot of water. You might not notice that you're dehydrated like you do during the warmer months, but water is leaving your skin all the time. You can combat dry skin from the inside-out by getting in plenty of water and eating foods rich in omega-3 fats (like salmon).

2. Make your home more comfortable

You should invest in a humidifier to keep moisture in the air inside your home — and turn down the heat when you shower to a temperature warm enough to be comfortable, but not scalding hot. Alternatively, you can also opt for cold showers.

Also, turn down the heat. You don't have to freeze, but dropping the indoor temperature a few degrees can help with dry skin.

3. Avoid harsh soaps (if you can)

It might not be the most convenient thing to do, but bringing your own moisturizing soap with you can keep you from having to use harsh soaps on your hands.

4. Slather on lotion constantly

Lotion is one of those things that people either love or hate. If you're a hater, get over it — at least for the winter.

Applying a rich body lotion (like Amlactin Moisturizing Body Lotion) right after you towel off from a shower to lock in moisture. Apply liberally throughout the day as you make your way outdoors, especially after washing your hands. Better yet: Keep a bottle of hand cream in your purse or backpack so you always have it available.

Extremely chapped skin can benefit from a generous amount of lotion, followed by a petroleum jelly like Vaseline. Petroleum jelly works by creating a thick barrier between your skin and the elements so the moisture can't be sucked out by the dry air.

If petroleum jelly isn't appealing to you, invest in thick body butters and creams with moisturizing ingredients like glycerin, uric acid, lactic acid, ceramides and hyaluronic acid.

Whishaw credits writer and director Paul King for Paddington's success. WARNER BROS.

Britain's most famous bear is back

Chatting with Ben Whishaw — the man behind Paddington himself — about innocence, comedy and maintaining the magic of the books.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
@MetroPhilly
gregory.wakeman@metro.us

It would be easy to dismiss Paddington and its sequel — out in theaters Friday, January 12 — as silly kids films that adults have to endure rather than enjoy.

But even the films' titanic Rotten Tomatoes scores — 98% and 100%, respectively — don't come close to underling just how magical, hilarious and poignant an experience they are for both children and grown-ups.

Key to this success is Ben Whishaw, who voices the titular bear. Whishaw wasn't the first choice to play the iconic literary character, who was created by Michael Bond in 1958 and has since featured in over 150 books.

A sense of innocence

In fact, Whishaw replaced Colin Firth in the role during postproduction on the original, immediately bringing a sense of innocence to the character. And according to Whishaw, that's the very thing he loves about Paddington.

"I think like every character I play, he is part of you somewhere," he says. "He's an innocent, and innocence is such a beautiful quality in people."

But it doesn't just come naturally. "It always takes us a little while to get cooking. It takes a while to start finding the right voice again, the right tone, the right feeling. You have to treat it like any character. 'Would he say that? That word doesn't sound right for him? What's he thinking in that moment?' You're just trying to identify every second of what's going on inside him."

Bring on the laughs

Whishaw insists that his job is made much easier because of Paul

King, who has written and directed both installments to the "Paddington" franchise.

"He's really the protector and spirit of Michael Bond and those books," the 37-year-old says. "He's such a brilliant interpreter of the spirit of Paddington, really. He's completely delightful and very, very funny. I just bow to him, really. If it weren't for him, I don't know that these films would be half the success they are." King rose to prominence as the director of the cult BBC comedy "The Mighty Boosh," and Whishaw believes that his innate understanding of the genre has helped to make the "Paddington" films unique. Especially since Whishaw is a complete novice when it comes to the funny stuff.

"He's an innocent, and innocence is such a beautiful quality in people."

"Paul's background is completely in comedy, I think that's what's brilliant is that the film's are genuinely funny," he says. "Paul is brilliant at understanding how comedy works."

"Which I don't understand. It's quite mysterious to me. I don't do a lot of comedy. I can see that he naturally grasps the mechanics of how you grab a joke."

"What is so beautiful is how he balances the comedy with the poignancy of this little bear and his quest to find a present for his aunt. Without it ever feeling like it is trying to pull on your heartstrings. But it does. I just have so much admiration for how Paul does it."

Liam Neeson can't even catch a train without pulling out a gun.
LIONSGATE

"The Commuter"

Director: Jaume Collet-Serra
Stars: Liam Neeson, Vera Farmiga
Rating: PG-13

With Liam Neeson in the lead and director Jaume Collet-Serra behind the camera, audiences will know exactly what to expect from "The Commuter" (hint: something like their other collaborations, "Non-Stop" and "Unknown"). This time, it's a film that flips from pulsating thriller to overblown action film. Fortunately, "The Commuter" — which could easily be labeled as "Taken" on a train — manages to be enjoyable, likely because of the presence of Liam Neeson doing Liam Neeson things.

Initially, Collet-Serra builds the tension so superbly that "The Commuter" starts with Hitchcock-ian edge, adding moments of cinematic panache that stop the film dovetailing into mediocrity. The opening sequence and a particular, one-shot fist fight are particularly impressive.

Ultimately, though, Collet-Serra trades all that in for a loud and stupid finale, which doesn't completely work. You might not hate "The Commuter," but you'll probably forget about it.

GREGORY WAKEMAN

"Paddington 2"

Director: Paul King
Stars: Ben Whishaw, Hugh Grant
Rating: PG

"Paddington 2" is so uplifting and affecting that this cruel world really doesn't deserve it. Everything about it is pitch perfect.

It's not all plain sailing for the beloved bear in the sequel, though, as he ends up in prison for a crime that he didn't commit. But Paddington's attitude — his innocence, his warmth — and how it contagiously spreads amongst those around him means you can't help but smile and glow throughout.

Its poignancy sings, never grates. It boasts side-splitting humor for kids and adults alike. But most important, it's a breezy, meticulously constructed family film with an anti-Brexit subtext brimming underneath. Co-writer and director Paul King and the cadence of Ben Whishaw are integral to making "Paddington 2" such a touching hoot, as they combine to create a joyful world that you wish reality mirrored more. Getting lost in "Paddington 2" is magical, feel-good and the perfect antidote to anyone feeling lost or blue. GW

Thomas Haden Church talks season 2 of HBO's 'Divorce'

The actor tells us what to expect from Henry Dufresne ahead of Sunday's premiere.

PAT KING
@MetroPhilly
patrick.king@metro.us

Get ready to take another trip back to the domestic battleground of Hastings-on-Hudson, as "Divorce" returns for its second season Sunday on HBO. The new season picks up six months from where we last left Henry and Frances Dufresne (played by Thomas Haden Church and Sarah Jessica Parker), with their divorce finalized.

I had the chance to sit down with Haden Church to see what we can expect from season two.

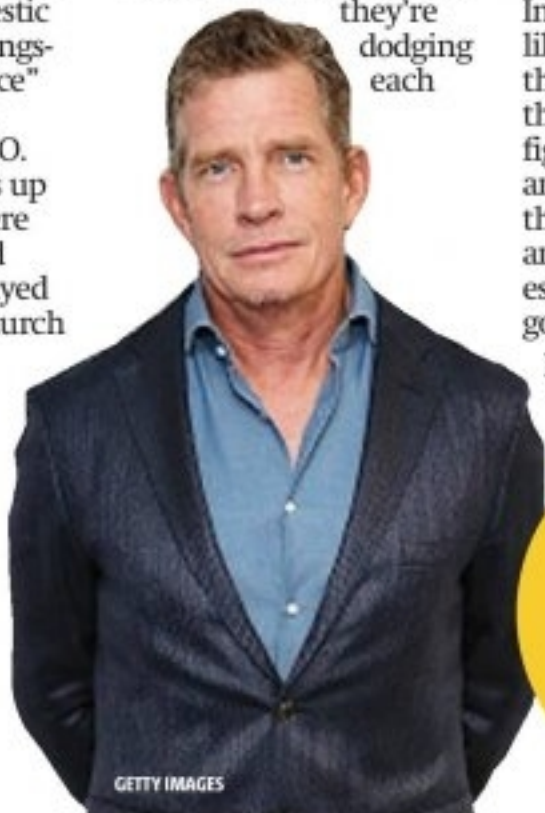

The divorce has been finalized at the beginning of this season and it seems like Robert has been humbled by his fierce battle with Frances.

The first season is largely defined by their egos that are in fight-or-flight mode. It's either confrontation or conflict or hiding with friends or with work. Even with the kids, they're dodging each other when they have to hand them off. The first season was so defined by conflict and upheaval. We had a whole year where we weren't shooting. In that time span, I think I had lost perspective a bit by the time we had gotten to the end of how dark we had gotten. Initially, they were both like "maybe we can get through this?" but by the end, it was like lions fighting over a scrap of antelope. So we were thinking if there really are two paths in the forest and you've already gone down that dark path, let's see what the alternative is.

'Coloring with intention' at the Philly Home Show

Convention Center this Friday and if you're looking to learn more about feng shui and painting, you must visit the Nevin Painting booth, where "coloring with intention" is the mantra.

So what is feng shui, exactly? According to Nancy Nevin, founder of Nevin Painting, it's the art of creating an environment that produces happiness and well-being.

"Our senses and emotions are affected by color, light, energy flow and how we perceive them," she says. "These thoughts and unconscious feelings are the basics of feng shui, and we can work to change our environment to improve our experience."

Nevin began working out of a studio loft in Old City, where her parents operated a printmaking workshop. The evolving nature of the art industry led her to a one-off house painting gig, which ended up becoming a successful business.

"I was able to draw on the talents of my artistically trained friends and family and soon pulled together a uniquely, highly capable painting crew — predominantly made up of women having backgrounds in the arts," she says.

Nevin Painting

Nancy Nevin is a master when it comes to feng shui and painting.

ing is now 26 years old and goes beyond painting walls by using color to improve the feel of a space as well as the lives of their clients.

"If you are having trouble sleeping, you may want to take a look at your bedroom colors," Nevin says. "Bright oranges, yellows and reds may not be optimal choices, these are energetic colors and may not encourage restful sleep. Softer pastels such as blues, greens and lavenders may be the better option, depending on your goals."

Want to make more money? Nevin tells us about one client who got a raise soon after tapping into the power of feng shui.

"I was working with an individual who was looking to make more money. Together, we decided to choose a color associated with xun [wealth and prosperity] and we painted an accent wall, together, with feng shui paint," she says. "We also placed a plant in her wealth-and-prosperity corner to add the intention of growth and prosperousness. Within six months she was promoted and making 30% more money than she had before."

So what if a client doesn't have much wall space to work with, but wants to add different elements to their life beyond wealth and prosperity? Accessorizing with color is another option.

"Li, for instance, is associated with the fire element and is in the fame-and-recognition area. Any object, painting, sculpture that has red or suggests fire could be used in this area to activate your intentions," she says. "With your intention, practicing feng shui can bring transcendental, positive effects, and placing a colored object is a start."

If you'd like to learn more about "coloring with intention," be sure to check out Nevin's presentation at the Philly Home Show's main stage at 2 p.m. on Jan. 14. For more information on Nevin Painting, visit: nevinpaint.com.

Rob Thomas on his Sidewalk Angels Foundation

The Matchbox 20 singer gears up for three charity performances at The Borgata, benefiting no-kill animal shelters.

JENNIFER LOGUE
@jenniferlogue
jennifer.logue@metro.us

Rob Thomas has already made the world a more melodic place with hits like "Smooth," "3AM" and "If You're Gone," but the Matchbox 20 singer is also making the world a better place through his Sidewalk Angels Foundation.

For the seventh year in a row, Thomas will perform three soldout shows at the Borgata's Music Box in Atlantic City to raise money for the organization, which provides funding for over 20 no-kill animal shelters around the country.

"My wife [Marisol] and I started it 13 years ago," he says. "We've been able to raise millions of dollars and help new organizations get started. Our whole idea is to keep our bottom line as small as we can so we can help other organizations get off the ground."

The couple has two rescue dogs themselves,

Rob Thomas and his wife Marisol started the Sidewalk Angels Foundation in 2003. PROVIDED and Thomas stresses that people need to be made more aware of the amount of responsibility that comes with owning pets.

"It really comes down to a new level of evolution as far as the understanding you have of the relationship between you and the animals," he says. "You need to look at them as sentient beings with feelings and emotions."

As far as the shows go, Thomas says to expect an acoustic, storyteller vibe.

"This time we have a four-piece [band] instead of a three-piece — we have the drummer from Antigone Rising playing with us as well," he says.

"It's a mix of solo material, Matchbox, covers — sometimes I play new songs I'm working on for new records. It's become a favorite night for us and our fans."

And what's next for Thomas? He's getting ready to record new solo material.

"I'm doing stuff with Butch Walker and Benny Blanco — songwriter extraordinaire. We've worked together in the past," he reveals. "It's really just about trying to find the right producer for the right songs."

While the shows are sold out for this weekend, you can still make a donation to support the Sidewalk Angels Foundation at sidewalkangelsfoundation.org.

*The Eagles and Falcons will be the first playoff game this weekend, kicking off at 4:35 Saturday afternoon on Fox. GETTY IMAGES

Why do underdog Eagles continue to get no respect from NFL world?

Birds players sound off about, once again, trying to silence doubters.

EVAN MACY
@evan_macy
evan.macy@metro.us

The Eagles are kind of pissed.

After posting the best record in the NFC, earning the No. 1 seed and fighting through injuries to nearly every one of their top players — including of course Carson Wentz, Jason Peters and Jordan Hicks (not to mention Fletcher Cox, Darren Sproles, Ronald Darby and more) — the Birds are getting no respect.

Nearly every prediction this weekend has the Falcons, the favored No. 6 seed winning in Philadelphia.

Forget the weather, which will be wet and cold and help the Eagles. Forget the Eagles defense, one of the top units in football. Forget the fact that Nick Foles has played in the post-season before and a top three NFL running attack. The league's pundits have hung Philly out to dry and more than a few Eagles fans have already started hedging their high hopes.

In the Eagles locker

“Even though we’re sick to our stomachs that these guys are not with us out there on the field, the train is still moving, and the sooner we get over that and get on to the next order of business, the better we’re going to become.”

Eagles head coach Doug Pederson room, the team is using it.

“What bothered me is we were 12-2, and we got treated like we were the Browns,” Pro Bowl tackle Lane Johnson said.

“I don’t like it, but I think it’s a good motivator. We come in, and Nick Foles is the new quarterback.

He’s not putting up 400 yards passing, so people panic.”

There is no shortage of bulletin board material for the Eagles, who seem to have gotten comfortable in the underdog role.

“Now it’s kind of in our DNA,” cornerback Jalen Mills said. “We know how people view us and see us and at the end of the day we find a way to win. After we won at Washington but lost at KC a lot of media guys came in saying ‘people think the Eagles are done.’ We are over that. Everybody is entitled to their own opinion but at the same time this team, the coaching staff, we know the kind of work we put in day in and day out.”

Why is it that Philadelphia teams always seem to get treated like Rocky Balboa?

“I think if you look at when the Patriots are playing well, that’s expected,” wide receiver Torrey Smith saith. “The Steelers have high expectations. In the NFC the Rams are flying high, the Falcons were just there last year. There are a lot of teams who are very good. I can’t speculate on that but I know that we believe in us and in the end that’s all that matters.”

Watch out for these matchups when Eagles, Falcons duel in NFC division game

A few head-to-head battles could determine if the Eagles or Falcons advance to the NFC Championship Game.

LUKE MILLER
@MetroPhilly

There are a lot of factors at play when the Eagles host the Falcons Saturday evening in the divisional round of the NFL playoffs. The weather figures to have a big impact, and for once Philadelphians will be hoping for a colder messier day when the dome team comes to town. With Carson Wentz' absence the Eagles running game figures to feature heavily. Here are five of the key matchups in the run game and the game in general:

When the Eagles have the ball:

RB Jay Ajayi against LB Deion Jones

The Eagles run game, a strength all season, became a necessity when Wentz went down against the Rams. A season ago, the Eagles used their running attack to beat the eventual conference champions in one of 2016's few balanced offensive performances.

That day they ran for 207 yards. If a repeat performance is in the cards it's going to have to come from different sources.

Ryan Mathews and Wendell Smallwood accounted for 179 of those 207 yards, but Mathews is gone and Smallwood just saw his first action since the team acquired Jay Ajayi in the meaningless regular season finale against Dallas. It's almost as unlikely he'll feature heavily in Saturday's game as it is Mathews will. Ajayi on the other hand, is primed for a featured role against the Falcons.

He's faced Atlanta more recently than the rest of the Eagles, and had his best performance of 2017 against them in a Week 6 win with the Dolphins, rushing for a season high 130 yards on 26 carries. The Eagles' leading rusher, Legarrette Blount, did not fare as well the last time he faced the Falcons: in Super Bowl LI. Blount was largely sidelined as the Patriots fell behind by 25 points, and finished with 31 yards on 2.8 yards per carry with a fumble lost.

When it comes to stopping Ajayi and co. Deion Jones is the main player for the Falcons. He finished fourth in the NFL with 138 total tackles and had a team-high ten stops in their Wild Card victory over the Rams. Jones, the Falcons' first round selection in 2016, was the Eagles' Jalen Mills' college roommate at LSU.

C Jason Kelce against DT Grady Jarrett and DT Dontari Poe

A huge reason the Eagles rank third in the NFL in rushing is the performance of the offensive line. For once, without a featured running back to steal the credit, plenty of plaudits have come their way. Center Jason Kelce and Right Tackle Lane Johnson were named First-Team All Pro selections and Johnson and Right Guard Brandon Brooks were voted into the Pro Bowl, while Kelce was regarded as one of the highest profile snubs from the all-star event.

For Kelce, 2017 has been a rebound year after the previous two featured inconsistent performances against bigger and stronger defensive linemen and some adventurous snaps of the football. It culminated in off-season speculation the team envisioned second-year guard Isaac Seumalo at the center spot and trade rumors for Kelce, but the veteran center has proven indispensable since the season began.

He and the Eagles guards will face one of their toughest challenges this season against the Falcons' talented interior linemen: Dontari Poe and Grady Jarrett. Poe had two-and-a-half sacks in his first season with Atlanta after signing a one year deal worth eight million dollars this off-season. After bursting onto the national scene with a three-sack performance in Super Bowl LI, Jarrett had a career high four sacks in 2017. Both contribute heavily to an Atlanta run defense that ranks ninth in the country.

When the Falcons have the ball:

LB Dannel Ellerbe against RB Devonta Freeman and RB Tevin Coleman

Seahawks 101, Rams 109, Raiders 137, Cowboys 126. Those are the rushing yard totals allowed in four of the Eagles last five games, and they are four of the six highest tallies this season against the NFL's best run defense. The other thing those games have in common? The Eagles played without middle linebacker Joe Walker. Walker himself replaced star linebacker Jordan Hicks midway through the season, but was placed on injured reserve prior to the season finale.

Ellerbe is the next man up, and even though he only joined the Eagles midway through the 2017 season, he has more playoff experience than most of the roster. He's played in ten playoff games with Baltimore and started for the entirety of their 2012 Super Bowl playoff run, making 32 tackles. For the Eagles, he's seen action only in the last two games, but, along with Mychal Kendricks and Nigel Bradham, he'll have the task of stopping Atlanta's dynamic duo at running back.

That duo is Devonta Freeman and Tevin Coleman, and while they've both starred at times, 2017 has seen their production drop off from a season ago. In the Falcons last five games, Coleman has just 129 rushing yards at 2.7 yards per carry, and Freeman, the lead back, has been held below four yards per carry in four of the last six.

That's the aberration for this pair however, and not the norm, and they haven't been nearly as quiet through the air. Both backs are weapons in the passing game that will keep all the Eagles linebackers busy Saturday.

CB Jalen Mills against WR Julio Jones

Jones is the Falcons most dangerous weapon and one of the top receiving threats in all the NFL. In seven career playoff appearances he is averaging 105 yards per game and has found his way to the endzone six times. He scores in the postseason at a much higher rate than the regular season. At 6-foot-3 Jones regularly muscles the ball away from defenders but has rare speed to beat them deep as well.

You can expect the Eagles to match him up with their most physical cornerback on the outside, Jalen Mills. Mills covered Jones for part of the Eagles victory over the Falcons in 2016, a game Jones finished with 10 catches for 135 yards but that included some costly drops. His production dipped slightly once Mills was given the assignment.

Then Mills was a seventh round rookie working his way into the starting lineup. Now he's winding up a sophomore campaign that may have seen him make the biggest leap forward of any player on the defense. Both players may be slightly banged up when they meet again. Jones has missed practice this week, and Mills finished the regular season nursing an ankle injury.

When the ball is changing hands:

KR Kenjon Barner against Falcons Kick Coverage

The Eagles special teams have received plenty of coverage in recent seasons, deservedly so. One place they haven't stood out in 2017 is on kick returns. They haven't had a ton of opportunities, due to a combination of the defense allowing few scores and touchbacks being as common as ever, but they haven't made the most of those chances either Saturday's matchup offers an opportunity to change that. The Falcons allow their opponents the highest average kick return yardage in the NFL: 26.9. If the Eagles are to take advantage of that, it will likely be done by Kenjon Barner, who has fielded the majority of returns since Darren Sproles was injured in Week 3.

Barner has had a quiet year returning kicks, averaging just 19.4 yards on an admittedly small sample size of 10 returns. But he has a 76 yard punt return this season and averaged 30.8 yards per kick return a season ago, so the game breaking ability is there. If nothing else, solid field position could swing what figures to be a slugfest.

NFL playoffs: Best bets for Divisional weekend action

Here's where to put your cash, or where to go in your playoff pick-em pool in Week 2 of the NFL playoffs:

Falcons (-2.5) at Eagles

It's not often that a six-seed is favored over a one-seed, but that's the case here.

Atlanta's defense should be able to stifle Nick Foles and company. The Falcons' run stoppers closed the regular season with a string of four-straight games holding opponents under 100 yards rushing. They let Todd Gurley rush for 101 yards last week, but considering he's in the MVP discussion, that's an achievement.

Philadelphia has struggled to move the ball on the ground since Carson Wentz's

Drew Brees and the Saints meet the Vikings' tough defense. GETTY IMAGES injury (85.3 YPG against the Giants, Raiders and Cowboys), as teams have been able to cheat up. Foles has shown he's nothing for defenses to fear, as he's passed for just 173 YPG in his three starts.

Atlanta's offense is not what it was a year ago, but Matt Ryan and Julio Jones should be able to exploit the Eagles' 17th-ranked pass stoppers. Lay the points with the Falcons.

The pick: Falcons -2.5

Titans at Patriots (-13.5)

The Titans have covered in six of their last seven, but backing the Patriots has been like printing money this season. New England is 9-1 ATS in their last 10 and have covered in each of their last five at home.

Diving into the matchup, Tom Brady should have no problem airing it out against the Titans' 25th-ranked pass defense. The Pats' offense also holds significant advantages in the scoring, time of possession and yards per play departments.

New England's defense can be bent but hasn't broken too often, as they rank 29th in YPG allowed but fifth in scoring. Tennessee's offense does not look like the kind that can push the Patriots around; Derrick Henry (and, health permitting, DeMarco Murray) can only carry the Titans so far. Sooner or later Marcus Mariota will have to match scores with Brady, and considering he had a negative TD-INT ratio this year, that is not something that should be counted on.

The pick: Patriots -13.5

Jaguars at Steelers (-7.5)

"The Killer Bs" should propel the Steelers to another AFC championship game appearance. Le'Veon Bell will get things started on the ground against the Jaguars' 22nd-ranked run stoppers. Ben Roethlisberger will have Antonio Brown to throw to once more as the receiver should return to the lineup after a two-week absence.

The Jaguars have no such weapons in the passing game, as evidenced by last week's sluggish performance against the Bills. Blake Bortles threw for just 75 yards in that 10-3 victory. Even if Leonard Fournette has a big game against the Steelers' 10th-rated run stoppers, he can only do so much to keep his team in the game.

The Steelers should be able to work their will against the warm-weather Jaguars in Pittsburgh, where the forecast calls for sub-freezing temperatures.

The pick: Steelers -7.5

Saints at Vikings (-4)

The Saints have been trending downward, failing to cover in four of their last five games, and it could be argued that they were fortunate to escape with a win at home against Carolina. Minnesota's offense presents a more dynamic challenge for the Saints' 17th-ranked defense.

The Vikings have rushed for over 100 yards in eight straight games, while Adam Thielen and Stefon Diggs give Case Keenum options to stretch the field with.

The Minnesota defense is also much more resolute than Carolina's, as they're first in points allowed as well as yards allowed. Expect Drew Brees and company to struggle a little bit as the Vikings advance to the NFC Championship round.

The pick: Vikings -4

Sixers blow 22-point lead to Celtics in London game

As is typically the case, there was a lot of good and a lot of bad in Wednesday's 114-103 loss.

EVAN MACY
@evan_macy
evan.macy@metro.us

The Sixers have an undeniable international flavor, and have felt right at home in London all week.

So it comes as no surprise that Philadelphia more or less played precisely as they do at home at London's O2 Arena Thursday, falling to the Celtics 114-103 and to 19-20 on the season.

In front of foreign fans that included stars from several Premier League soccer teams like Arsenal and Chelsea (a game Joel Embiid attended) the Sixers went from double digit leaders to double digit trailers in seemingly record time.

In the first half the Sixers tantalized fans live-streaming in their offices back in the States, seeing Philly jump to a lead as big as 22 over Kyrie Irving and Boston. But as they are prone to do, the Sixers failed to score during the final 4:37 of the first half to let Boston back within nine points at the second horn.

And then, midway into the third quarter after Celtics first rounder Jason Tatum (11 points in the frame) started to heat up, Boston posted its first lead at 69-68.

Philly stayed in the game in the third but didn't do themselves any favors, turning the ball over a combined 13 times during the middle two quarters of the contest.

By the time the Sixers had a chance to breathe, a 54-25 run over a 15 minute stretch saw the Sixers down 102-85 midway through the fourth.

In the setback, J.J. Redick's 22 points (18 of them in the first half) led the way as the dynamic duo of Embiid and Ben Simmons also shined.

Embiid had an off night shooting but still tallied 15 points, 10 rebounds and five assists while Simmons added 16.

Aries A little extra cash appears to be heading in your direction. Invest in something that will improve your life. A promise to someone you love is favored.

Taurus An insincere gesture should be handled cautiously. Don't feel obligated to pay for someone else's mistake. Offer suggestions, but not a cash donation.

Gemini Keep your emotions in check when dealing with professional matters or situations that concern people you must deal with daily. Don't offer false hope.

Cancer Follow through if you make a promise. Ask questions if you feel someone isn't being completely up-front with you. Being frank will help you avoid distress.

Leo Be realistic and willing to work hard to keep the peace and live within your means. Don't share personal information or lend or borrow money or possessions.

Virgo Listen to complaints carefully. You'll discover something about someone that will help you make the changes you know you should be putting into play.

Libra Don't let anyone make decisions for you. It's important to take better care of your health and to base the choices you make on what's best for you in the long term.

Scorpio Speak up, share your feelings and make suggestions that will bring about a lifestyle change that you've wanted to make for some time. Embrace the future.

Sagittarius You'll tend to be emotional today, making you an easy target for someone who wants to take advantage of you. Don't offer any information that might incriminate you.

Capricorn Take an innovative approach to old ideas to come up with a winning combination that will help you resolve past issues and conquer new quests. Romance is highlighted.

Aquarius Go somewhere that you find peaceful. Evaluate your current lifestyle and consider how best to make improvements. Happiness should be your priority.

Pisces A realistic view of what's going on around you will help you avoid uncertainty or bad choices. Someone will tempt you using false information. EUGENIA LAST
